  - Taxable unless course is job-related (course maintains or improves your current RIT job skills); first $5,250 of graduate waiver per calendar year can be tax-free, even if not job-related
  - The determination is based on the course, not the degree program; a course is not considered job-related because the degree is required for your RIT job
  - Not job-related if the course will help you prepare for your next RIT job
  - You should use specific comparisons between your RIT job description and the course description
  - Refer to tax details in Educational Benefits summary on HR website

IMPORTANT: Tax Amount Could Be Significant
