Our own personal experiences in career development may be very different from some of our peers and colleagues. It is important to build a network of individuals who can share their experiences and potentially even make connections for you that may lead to a new position of interest. Some of these connections may even lead to finding a mentor, a trusted individual that can guide you and advise you in your career development. The different perspectives can be eye-opening and provide a lens you never looked through before, aiding in your career development.
