6 Beginning Your Career Journey

Successful students know that landing a co-op or internship doesn't happen overnight. Start learning about your major's co-op requirements and experiential learning opportunities this week, or attend a networking event. It all starts with a single step.

3 Ways to ROAR this Week:

- Check your major's co-op and experiential learning options. What's the difference between an internship and a co-op? What other types of experiential learning options—like research or study abroad—can you pursue at RIT?
- Learn about different careers. What kinds of careers are available for people in your major? Use one of the many tools available online to explore careers you might be interested in and learn about the companies, skills, and job titles you could be looking for when it's time to start your search.
- Read the RIT Career Fair Survival Guide. Every year RIT hosts a University-wide Career Fair as well as specialized fairs for certain majors and for students interested in working with the National Labs and Research Centers. Get familiar with what to do before, during, and after these big career events with help from RIT Career Services.
