

Causes Spy Scare With Flashlight

VANCOUVER, Wash., Nov. 28—Police began looking for an enemy agent when workers in the Vancouver shipyard reported blinking lights in a building above the yard each morning.

This is what they found: On the third floor of the State School for the deaf, one of the students had rigged himself a sleep-proof device. Unable to awaken at 5:45 a. m. each day, the ingenious youth had hooked up a flashlight arrangement with his clock that flashed in his eyes and never failed to awaken him. The light was seen winking through a window at the yard.
