ROCHESTER, N.Y.—National Technical Institute for the Deaf at Rochester Institute of Technology was awarded $1.16 million by The Nippon Foundation to “continue its leading role in improving education and career opportunities for deaf people around the world.” This follows last year’s $900,000 award with which NTID established the Postsecondary Education Network International, aimed at helping colleges worldwide improve technological education for their deaf students. Dr. James DeCaro, former Dean of NTID and director of the foundation’s gift, calls the PEN-International program “A very exciting, multi-layered project.”
