

An experienced world traveler with an interest in helping young adults with disabilities in developing countries, originally from India, I was raised in Los Angeles, California. I graduated from the Rochester Institute of Technology (R.I.T.) where I was president of the student government and majored in new media and e-business. I spent time pursuing a Masters degree in deafness rehabilitation and education before taking a position as an internship coordinator, assisting minority students with internship positions with U.S. federal agencies.

I was a human rights delegate for Global Youth Connect organization in Cambodia in Summer 2005. Inspired by my time there, I have developed a program called, Global Reach Out (GRO), where it provide young adults from USA to have a cross-cultural experience with the young adults in the developing countries. I hope to establish a non-profit organization dedicated to supporting role models for the young adults in developing countries. He is currently a Student Development Coordinator for Student Life Team at National Technical Institute for the Deaf.
