IRONDEQUOIT — The Irondequoit Indians will soon be no more.

The West Irondequoit Board of Education last night, in a 6-to-0 vote, agreed to retire the Indians name and logos over the next year and to ask Superintendent Glenn Wachter to look into ways to involve the community in finding a new name for Irondequoit High School teams.

Last week, Wachter asked the board to consider changing the name. The request came in response to an April memo from state Education Commissioner Richard P. Mills urging districts to end the use of Native American names, symbols and mascots.

Last night's vote followed more than two hours of statements from residents, students and Native Americans, both for and against a name change.

More than 60 people attended the meeting, but nearly half left before the board voted.

Student athletes, such as varsity football players Mike Bryant, Mike Smahol and Mike Zaccardo, said they hate to think of losing the Indians name.

"We take pride in it," said Bryant.

"If they take it away, they're taking a little pride away from the school," said Zaccardo.

"We don't think it's derogatory at all. We're proud to be Indians," said Smahol.

Native Americans in the audience applauded the vote.

"I'm very pleased that they didn't come to the politically correct decision," said Judy Buckley, a Cherokee. "They took information from indigenous peoples that it affects and reflected on that; this was not a knee-jerk decision."

Others disagreed. "They're all puppets to those above them," said alumni Robert Benz, a supporter of the Indians name.

The board gave no date for any additional action.

Athletic Director Dennis Fries said he didn't think it would be possible to replace Irondequoit High School's athletic team uniforms this year.

"Forget the fall," he said. "Those uniforms are already out, whatever's on them is on them. Getting uniforms is a three-month process. When we order in June, we cross our fingers we'll get them by September."

Fries said most of the district's nearly 80 athletic teams do not carry logos, though many carry the Indians name.

Many West Irondequoit athletes wanted to keep the school nickname, but last night's board vote ended that hope. The community will be involved in finding a new name.
